Big Tunnel Through Mts. Held Likely

San Diego County's biggest project is a 34-mile rail, highway and water tunnel through the Laguna mountains. It would be the largest in the world.

With its connections to existing facilities, the project has been estimated to cost upward of 120 million dollars. But it would chop about 30 miles from existing rail and highway distances to the East and provide easy and gradients for fast service through the mountains.

Cost Estimated

The project dwarfs recurrent plans for a tunnel under the bay to link San Diego and Coronado. John E. Abbott, who has been named chairman of a study committee of the Highway Development Association, will not hazard any firm estimate. But maps drawn by proponents of the plan speak of 82 million dollars for the tunnel, 14 million for the west approach, 10 millions for the east approach and 12 millions for miscellaneous items.

These figures probably are under, rather than over, the actual cost. In 1946 the State Highway Commission estimated it would cost $91,500,000 for a new highway to Imperial Valley, incorporating only a 12-mile tunnel under Cuyamaca Mountain at a 2500 foot elevation. The estimate for the 12-mile tunnel ran to 80 million dollars for a bore much smaller than projected in the Great Southwest tunnel project.

Survey Demanded

It is generally agreed that local financing would be impossible. Efforts are under way to obtain the tunnel as a federal defense job. The first move would be to get the Army Corps of Engineers to make a survey.

Not urged by backers as an advantage is the possibility of mineral discoveries. It would be, in effect, the biggest prospect hole ever drilled in San Diego County's mountains. It would travel not too far from the famed gold fields of other days.

The big bore, estimated to be 75 feet wide and 60 feet high, could be drilled through the 34 miles of rock in 353 days, according to estimates of Hillman Hansen, Long Beach civil engineer. He has had the tunnel in his bonnet for years and sees it as a boost to Long Beach and San Diego.

Hansen would do it this way: Each two miles along the tunnel route he would drill a shaft down to the tunnel level. Then he would start drilling both ways from the bottom of each shaft. He figures there would be 34 drilling crews at work simultaneously, each one advancing 15 feet a day.

Rock Salable

They would chew out 58,284,676 tons of rock. Most of it, he figures, would be jurassic granite which could be sold to help defray the cost of the job. An estimate of 40 cents a ton for the rock is made. Of course, if there were gold or silver—. Or maybe tin, lead or uranium—.

The tunnel job itself would call for railroad trackage on what might be called the first story. This would be 75 feet wide and 20 feet high, providing space for two double-track railroads. Adjacent to the main tunnel would be a 12 foot construction bore that would be used in connection with the job. It would be used later as the tunnel's aqueduct to

For hearts estranged, won back to fellowship
And closer knit by sweet forgiveness;
For hearts made tender by fortune's blows;
For souls by sorrows ripened in Thy love;
Yea, and for pain that took our pride away
And cast us wholly on Thy charity;
For darkened ways that led us to the light;
For blinding tears that yet renewed our sight;
For travails and perplexities of mind
Through which we wrestled, nobler life to find—
And found, beyond our craving soul's upreach,
The wonder of the lessons Thou wouldst teach.
We thank Thee, thank Thee, thank Thee, Lord.

The purpose of the demonstration was to pass on to other districts the ideas and information from which Lemon Grove school has profited. This exchanging of ideas is to be done throughout the country.

Local People Pay Visit to Russian Colony in Mexico

After hearing so much about the Russian colony in Guadaulupe Valley, and damage done there by the recent earthquake, Dr. and Mrs. J. W. Estabrook, 7682 Central avenue decided to visit the place one day last week. Dr. Estabrook gives this interesting account of their trip last Wednesday.

"After traveling approximately 53 miles from Tijuana on the road to Ensenada, we turned east on a "just fair" dirt road for about 15 miles. The land between the coast and the valley was dry and parched. The day was very hot.

"Upon arriving in the valley we stopped in the inky shade of some huge pepper trees to eat our lunch. Never go down without your lunch. While resting in the cool shade, an old gentleman came over from the house across the road. He was very cordial, and speaking broken English, seemed anxious to talk to us. He was one of the original Russian colonists who settled in this valley some 30 or 40 years ago, coming from Turkestan, to escape military service in the Russian Army.

"The old man went on to describe the earthquake. He said it began with a great roar and violent shaking of the earth, with clouds of dust arising everywhere. He ran from his blacksmith shop to the house, to see if his wife was safe. Fortunately she was working out in the yard.

"He invited us into his home to see the damage that had been done. Plaster was down and there were many cracks in the walls. His wife was ironing in the kitchen, her flatiron heated by a gasoline attachment, much like a plumbers torch. She spoke no English, but the smile she gave us is the same in any language. After hearing that there had been many shakes almost daily, since the big one, I was very glad to get out in the open again.

"The house was a very neat looking L-shaped white house with five rooms. Most of the furniture was very old fashioned. The beds looked enormous, having very high headboards and piled high with feather beds. Back against the wall were two huge square pillows. Everything was immaculately clean.

"This man told us that he owned 150 acres of fertile land with 15,000 grape vinnes. He has 10 children, some of whom are living in Los Angeles. He seemed to know very little about the rest of the world. He knew of New York City and had heard that land around the Mississipi was very poor. He was very interested in ,knowing what the newspapers in the United States had to say about the earthquake.

"Most of the houses in the valley were neat and white, with gardens and irrigation ditches. We saw a group of school children and were told that the tow-headed ones were Russians and the others Indians, We were also told there was a hot spring near by, but we did not see it. It was a very enjoyable and interesting trip and we hope to go again some day.

The Readers Digest has started a campaign against this terrific government spending program. Every American voter should join the Digest in its campaign. The magazine publishes a table showing the expenditures of all Presidents from Washington's administration down through the first two Roosevelt terms, and these figures are astounding: $179,620,113,345. The Digest then says: "Spent by President Truman from fical year 1946 to September 30, 1949, $191,081,394,-191." Of course, President Truman could not spend this staggering sum if the Congress did not vote him the money. Therefor the taxpayers should look for relief not alone in the White House but in the Senate and Lower House as well. Every candidate who comes before the voters next year should be pinned down as to just wheres he stands on this spending program, snd unless he is for rigid economy his plea for support should be rejected, be he Democrat or Republican.

There is some agitation for a woman for President in some quarters. The Review believes that such is the eventuality, but a long ways off. Viviem Kellems, the fiery Connecticut business woman, has thrown out a challenge to the men of this nation to bestir themselves and clean up the political mess, or "we women are going to take over." Miss Kellems has been having a fight with the treasury department over withholding taxes from her employees' payrolls. She contends that she is not an employee of the government, and therefore should not be required to make these collections and turn them over to the treasury department. The strange thing about it is that the department apparently is doing nothing about it.

FROM THE NEWS CIRCUIT

JAMES DORAIS

A favorite claim of self-serving political aspirants is that votes can be promised and traded and bandied about in "blocs." Always, in election season, we hear of the labor vote, the old-age vote, the farm vote, the Yugoslav vote, the pinsetters vote, etc., etc.

It's true that should an issue on the ballot directly affect the interests of the waitress, for example, waitressess could be expected to vote as a bloc. But on matters of general interest, waitresses, like bankers, butchers and ballistics experts, vote as individuals. Like all citizens, they weigh the pros and cons of the subject, listen to the arguments, read their newspapers, and examine the standing and background of the organizations and individuals who have taken sides on the issue.

On election day, the fate of any issue depends on which side had the better case and did the better job of presenting it. In the last analysis, people vote according to their judgment, their political philosophy and their status as citizens and taxpayers —not according to their occupation or the particular old country their antecedents hailed from.

That lesson is proved at every election. Yet in every election campaign, the old myth that people vote in blocs is dusted off and trotted in. and many a hopeful political deal is based on it.

Early in the bitterly contested campaign for Proposition 2, such a deal was made. The McLain forces, who hadn't been taken too seriously the year before, squeaked through a narrow victory with the adoption of the McLain Pension scheme on the crowded general election ballot of 1948. Suddenly McLain looked like a "comer" to a lot of political scramblers.

Proposition 2—to repeal the McLain Pension scheme, was not a labor issue in any way. The proof is evident in the fact that organized labor took no stand one way or another in the original McLain campaign. Nevertheless, George H. McLain was successful in persuading certain politically ambitious labor officials to put their unions on record against Proposition 2. The deal, of course, was that the "old age vote" could be traded for the "labor vote."

It didn't work, of course, as the election results showed. The rank and file of union people preferred to ignore the commitments of their "leaders" and make the proper decision themselves.

A tale is told of a tally kept once at a political campaign headquarters of all the "bloc" votes claimed during the course of the campaign by callers with special axes to grind. When the campaign was over, the final total exceeded the number of votes cast at the polls.

Political Parade

CLEM WHITAKER, Jr.

Playing it cute, instead of straight away as in last year's presidential campaign, President Truman reared back in a "non political" speech from St. Paul last week and let fly at the "special interests" and "reactionary" forces. Mr. Truman then praised the record of his Democratically-controlled 81st Congress.

Perhaps, however, with the thought that the record could stand improvement, that not enough of his "Fair Deal" program had been enacted, Truman stated, "I am confident that the 81st Congress will accomplish a good deal more next year in its second session."

With every eye on the crucial 1950 congressional elections, with campaigning already under way, on the issue of Mr. Truman's "Fair Deal," or as his opponents call it, State Socialism, it is rapidly becoming apparent that the next session of Congress will provide the early battleground. Most analysts are agreed that it is practically inevitable that a rough, tough, bitterly-contested session will take place.

The issues in Congress when it reconvenes in January are predicted as follows:

1. Outright repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act. The Democratic high command recognizes that repeal has little or no chance, but feels that Taft-Hartley is still prime campaign ammuniton.

2. A tax increase to meet the cost of the "Fair Deal." This issue is apt to be held down to an extent. Undoubtedly any fight for more taxes will be on the basis that only "big business" and corporations will be hit. The great danger, from Truman's standpoint, is that few people are naive enough to believe that they don't pay all taxes levied on goods enroute to consumers.

3. A drive for Fair Employment Practices bill. This measure has been bruited about in Congress for years.

4. Enactment of the Brannan farm plan. There is little likelihood of passage of the Brannan plan, but the Democrats hope to woo Mid-West farm votes by giving it a college try.

5. Compulsory Health Insurance. The Administration, at the moment, is soft-pedaling talk of compulsory health insurance, but all indications are that a blitz attempt will be made to ram it through shortly after Congress opens shop.

As indicated, there is very little chance of passage for any of the five major issues, the battle lines are being drawn more clearly every day.

It looks like 1950 will be the supreme test for the bureaucratic planners. Either they sell the "Fair Deal" and statism, or the string will have run out, the trend reversed.

Girl Scout News

The Neighborhood Club met Monday at Community Center, with Mrs. Bjork, Day Camp representative, a guest, and Mesdames I. B. Burkett, Stanley Cassell and G. L. Dickerhoff, hostesses. Day Camp for 1950 were discussed. The next meeting will be a Christmas party, December 12, from 1:30 to 3:30 at the Community Center. Each one attending will bring a gift, not to exceed 50c, to exchange.

The Brownie Troop under the leadership of Mrs. E. C. Krunch, had a picnic hike to the Roy Nicodemus home last Tuesday. The girls took a sack lunch. Cookies, coffee and punch were served to the girls and the committee mothers attending.

Brownie Troop 96, had an investiture for Sharon Sanders, Judith Domijan, Cynthia White and Cecelia Rojar.

Brownie Troop 308 held an investiture for Jackolyn Bray who was absent because of illness, when the other girls were invested.

Mrs. Harvey Hodapp has taken over the leadership of Brownie Troop 374, formerly led by Mrs. O. J. Brett.

Four girls from Girl Scout Troop 372 attended the Girl Scout rally at the Fox Theatre, Saturday. Their sponsor, the Lemon Grove Lion's Club, furnished transportation.

Troop 228 had 17 girls attending the rally. At their last meeting, they made a trip to the city dog pond.

Troop 79 had seven girls attending the Rally. Mrs. Mabel Meetteer helped with the transportation. At their last meeting sketches of gifts for their parents were made. Popcorn was served by Monia McIntosh and their leader Marilyn Brunch, former member, was a guest.

Talks and Walks With Mother Nature

BY TRIXIE TREGANZA

MOURNING DOVE

Coo-Coo. Do you hear that mounful, sweet, plaintive call of the dove coming to us from yonder orchard? Eons upon eons, way back to the dawn of creation the ancestors of this same dove were ever the messengers of peace and love. Let us turn back the pages of history. You all know the story of Noah and the Ark, the great deluge, and how after 40 days he opened a window and sent forth a dove. How she found no rest for the soles of her feet and returned to the shelter of the Ark. Then after seven days Noah again released a Dove and this time she returned with an olive leaf in her mouth, and he knew the waters were falling away. To the ancient Greeks who believed in many Gods, the dove was the sacred bird of Venus, so was it to the Israelites and to Jerusalem in fact every Christian nation has adopted the dove as the symbol of peace, gentleness and love

There's one now flying across our path. Just see how exquisitly Mother Nature has designed this little feathered airship with its long, pointed bill, its tail narrowed to the finest point, its powerful wings. Just like a bullet it cuts the air with its swift flight.

It is beautiful, too, with its soft colored plumage, olive-gray-brown above, the head bluish slate with sides marked with metallic reflections and decorated with several black marks below the ear. The fan shaped tail is prettily banded with black and broadly tipped with white. The belly is a creamy-buff and the breast tinged with delicate pink.

Mr. and Mrs. Mourning Dove are not socially inclined. They live to themselves and only band together in the Fall of the year. Mr. Dove is a most devoted, ardent lover, a model husband and an ideal father. He doesn't help build the nest, but he does relieve his mate incubating the eggs and then feeding the babies. Have you ever seen a dove's nest? It's just a rickety lattice, a few coarse sticks without rim or lining, a mere platform that you can see right through, and its apt to be built anywhere from the bare ground up and placed in most any old position.

Mrs. Dove is surely a shiftless housewife—no soft, feathery lining to protect the little naked bodies of her two babies from scratches and bruises from their coarse mattress. But she has an amiable disposition and gentle manners, and perhaps Mr. Dove just overlooks her shortcomings. Two oval, pure white eggs, two weeks taking turns at breeding. then two babies that are fed for a while on pigeon milk. The parents eat food and when it is partly digested bring it up again which is called regurgitation. Then the babies poke their heads into the parents' beaks and feed at the banquet table at regular intervals until they are large enough to eat more solid food. And speaking of food, had you ever stopped to wonder what doves eat. Well, it's weed seeds, weed seeds and more weed seeds; 7500 weed seeds, 9200 weed seeds is just one meal for a dove. And oh, how your folks and all your folk friends wage an incessant battle to keep the weeds down. Have they ever stopped to recognize and appreciate these wonderful helpers that Mother Nature has given them. Only one percent of the Dove's food is insects which is probably picked up accidently on the weeds and waste grain they sometimes eat.

But folks are just beginning to realize the true value of all bird life and what part it plays in the economy of their lives.

Years ago when America was young your great-grandfathers didn't know much about these things. They hadn't had many crop failures or many visitations of crickets and hordes of grass hoppers to make them sit up and think. Nature was bounteous and they took it for granted. The extirmination of the Passenger Pigeon is a shameful record on the pages of bird history. Ask some of them to tell you about it, how countless thousands darkened the sun for days in their flight—how they were hunted and shot and clubbed—until today not one remains of the greatest zoological wonder the world has ever known. So, boys and girls, you must make amends for the sins of your fathers. By education, learning and knowing what good a bird does, what it eats, how it lives, you will not violate a sacred trust. Whenever you see a bird, just ask: Now what work does that bird have to perform, for every bird has a mission in life and a definite work to do. Of what value is it to mankind and how can I protect it?

SCHOOL NEWS

Among 40 teachers of San Diego County enjoying a flight over the county last Sunday afternoon were seven teachers from Lemon Grove School. Prior to the flight they made a tour of the weather station at Lindberg Field and heard an interesting discussion on the various types of planes used for commercial flights. The type of plane used for Sunday's trip was Western's Convair '49er. After circling Del Mar, the plane turned inland, for a ride over the back country past Ramona and Julian. They were permitted a good view of this community, when the captain brought the ship down to 1500 feet above Lemon Grove. They then circled the downtown area of San Diego and Coronado, and on down to Mexico. They landed at the field at 3:00. During the flight, the teachers were permitted to walk about the ship and to visit the pilot's cabin. This is not allowed on regular commercial flights. Included were Mrs. Margaret Darroch, Mrs. Evelyn Whalen, Miss Francis Read, Miss Lavancha Bauman, Mrs. Ada Krimsky, Mrs. Hazel Schwalm and Robert Masters.

Teachers in Expedition to Bird Rock

On Saturday several local teachers joined with an expedition of approximately 200 from State College and other school districts for an exploration at Bird Rock, at La Jolla, led by Sam Hinton, Curator of the Museum at the Scripps Institute of Oceanography. The group was very fortunate in taking advantage of the minus tide, being able to view many types of animal sea life. Teachers from the schools here who participated were Mrs. Evelyn Whalen, Mrs. Pauline Miller, Mrs. Dorothy Babington and Mrs. Ada Krimsky.

Equestrian Activities in and Around Lemon Grove

By MARGE ELLISON

This week being Thanksgiving week, we can sit back and relax while reviewing the recent fun shows, gymkhanas, meetings, parades, etc. There's no question about the last eicht months being crammed full of every kind of equestrian events imaginable, with variations a plenty to suit every taste and hobby. And calling particular attention to the success and promotion of equestrianism—more riders on the trails, better-groomed and better breeds of horses, more enthusiasm, competition, sportsmanship and, slowly but surely, a closer bond of fellowship and understanding among everyone interested in horses.

Proof of this loyalty among the horsemen was demonstrated in the amazing turn-out of more than 100 riders, breeders, exhibitors, ranchers and merchants, from every part of the county, as far north as Fallbrook, Oceanside, Escondido, Vista and south to Palm City, who rallied to the support of the petition of the horsemen to close the old Wiley Road through the Otay Ranch so that an easement could be used for a 20-foot trail through the ranch. It was exhilarating to see the horsemen and women pour into the Supervisors' Chambers at two o'clock last Monday afternoon, a great majority garbed in riding clothes. The western atmosphere of Stetsons, levis and boots lent an air of the old Frontier days to the hearing. We are indebted to Supervisor Gibson and Robbins for being such staunch supportters of the trails, in behalf of the riders. The results of more than six months of work and effort terminated satisfactorily to all concerned, with a request to the County Road Department and County Counsel's Office to procure easements across the Otay Valley for a highway to include also a riding and hiking trail. Just how long this will take, we do not know, but it's a good beginning and creates a situation whereby both sides of the issue can now unite their efforts for the same cause instead of pulling in opposite directions to achieve the same goal.

Thanksgiving Day at 4:00 many horsemen will gather in their best bib and tucker at the North Park Baptist Church to attend the wedding of Jean Morgan and Norman Marsh. There will be a reception immediately following the ceremony. Jean's Daddy, energetic Cecil Morgan, popular announcer at most of the shows and a sincere friend of all the horsemen, extended an open invitation in his last two Sunday broadcasts, so it is anticipated that many friends of the Morgans will be on hand for the wedding.

And by this time almost everyone has heard of the match races, between eight local riding clubs, to be held each Sunday at the Agua Caliente Race Track—beginning next Sunday with Aztec Riders starting off the stunt, to be followed on December 4 by a race among eight Rock 'N Ride members and so on for eight succeeding Sundays. On January 22 the winners of the eight races will compete for the all-winner title. Club-house passes are available for all who wish to go and can be procured from officers of riding clubs, from Billy McMahon, also at Walter Church's Service Station at 7th and University and from headquarters of San Diego County Horsemen's Assn., Inc. Everyone is welcome and the bigger the crowd, the more fun we'll have. One requisite to accepting the passes is that you be attired in riding clothes while attending the races. This should be popular with all of us. There will be television and news-reel men on hand, so watch your manners. And don't pass up this opportunity for a good time while boosting the moral of the riders. There's one thing certain, these races will be run honestly—it's all among friends.

carry Colorado River water to San Diego.

The east end of the tunnel would be slightly higher than the west end to provide for gravity flow of water. The east end of the tunnel would be 1100 feet above sea level. The westesrn or San Diego end would be at 900. foot elevation. In places the tunnel would be 4000 feet below the surface.

The second or upper story of the tunnel would carry the projected six-lane divided highway. Between the two sets of three-lane roads would be a dividing wall that would separate east and west-bound traffic and keep the headlights of opposing traffic from shining in the eyes of drivers.

On either side of the second story would be three foot walkways, elevated well above the roadway.

Plans Unfinished

There are no detailed plans for all phases of the tunnel, but the project would include the necessary lighting and ventilating systems, it was explained.

Abbot, of Spring Valley, who has had tunnel on his mind for years, puts it this way: The grade would have to be not more than .8 percent for satisfactory railroad operation. This could be obtained by starting at the mouth of the Sweetwater River at San Diego harbor, just south of National City, and extending the rail line up Sweetwater River bed to the dam, then through a canyon north of the dam and generally upriver to a point east of Dehesa.

Western Terminus

There, at a point around 22 miles east of San Diego, the western end of the tunnel would be established at the 900 foot contour.

From the eastern portal, the railroad grade, accompanied by the highway, would swing through Carrizo wash in the direction of Yuma, intersecting U.S. Highway 80 in the vinciinty of El Centro.

On the western end, a highway could be built down the Sweetwater alongside the railroad track. Another roadway could connect with U.S. 80 three miles east of El Cajon, While Highway 94, through Lemon Grove would carry the bulk of the traffic.
